Research Level:

Kenyan is a 19-year-old undergraduate studying oil painting from Beijing, finds inspiration in galleries. Thrilled to be in Chicago, home to a major art museum, she's keen on Western art history. Though nervous about her first English research paper for an art history class, she's dedicated and eager to grow as an artist.

Frustrations:

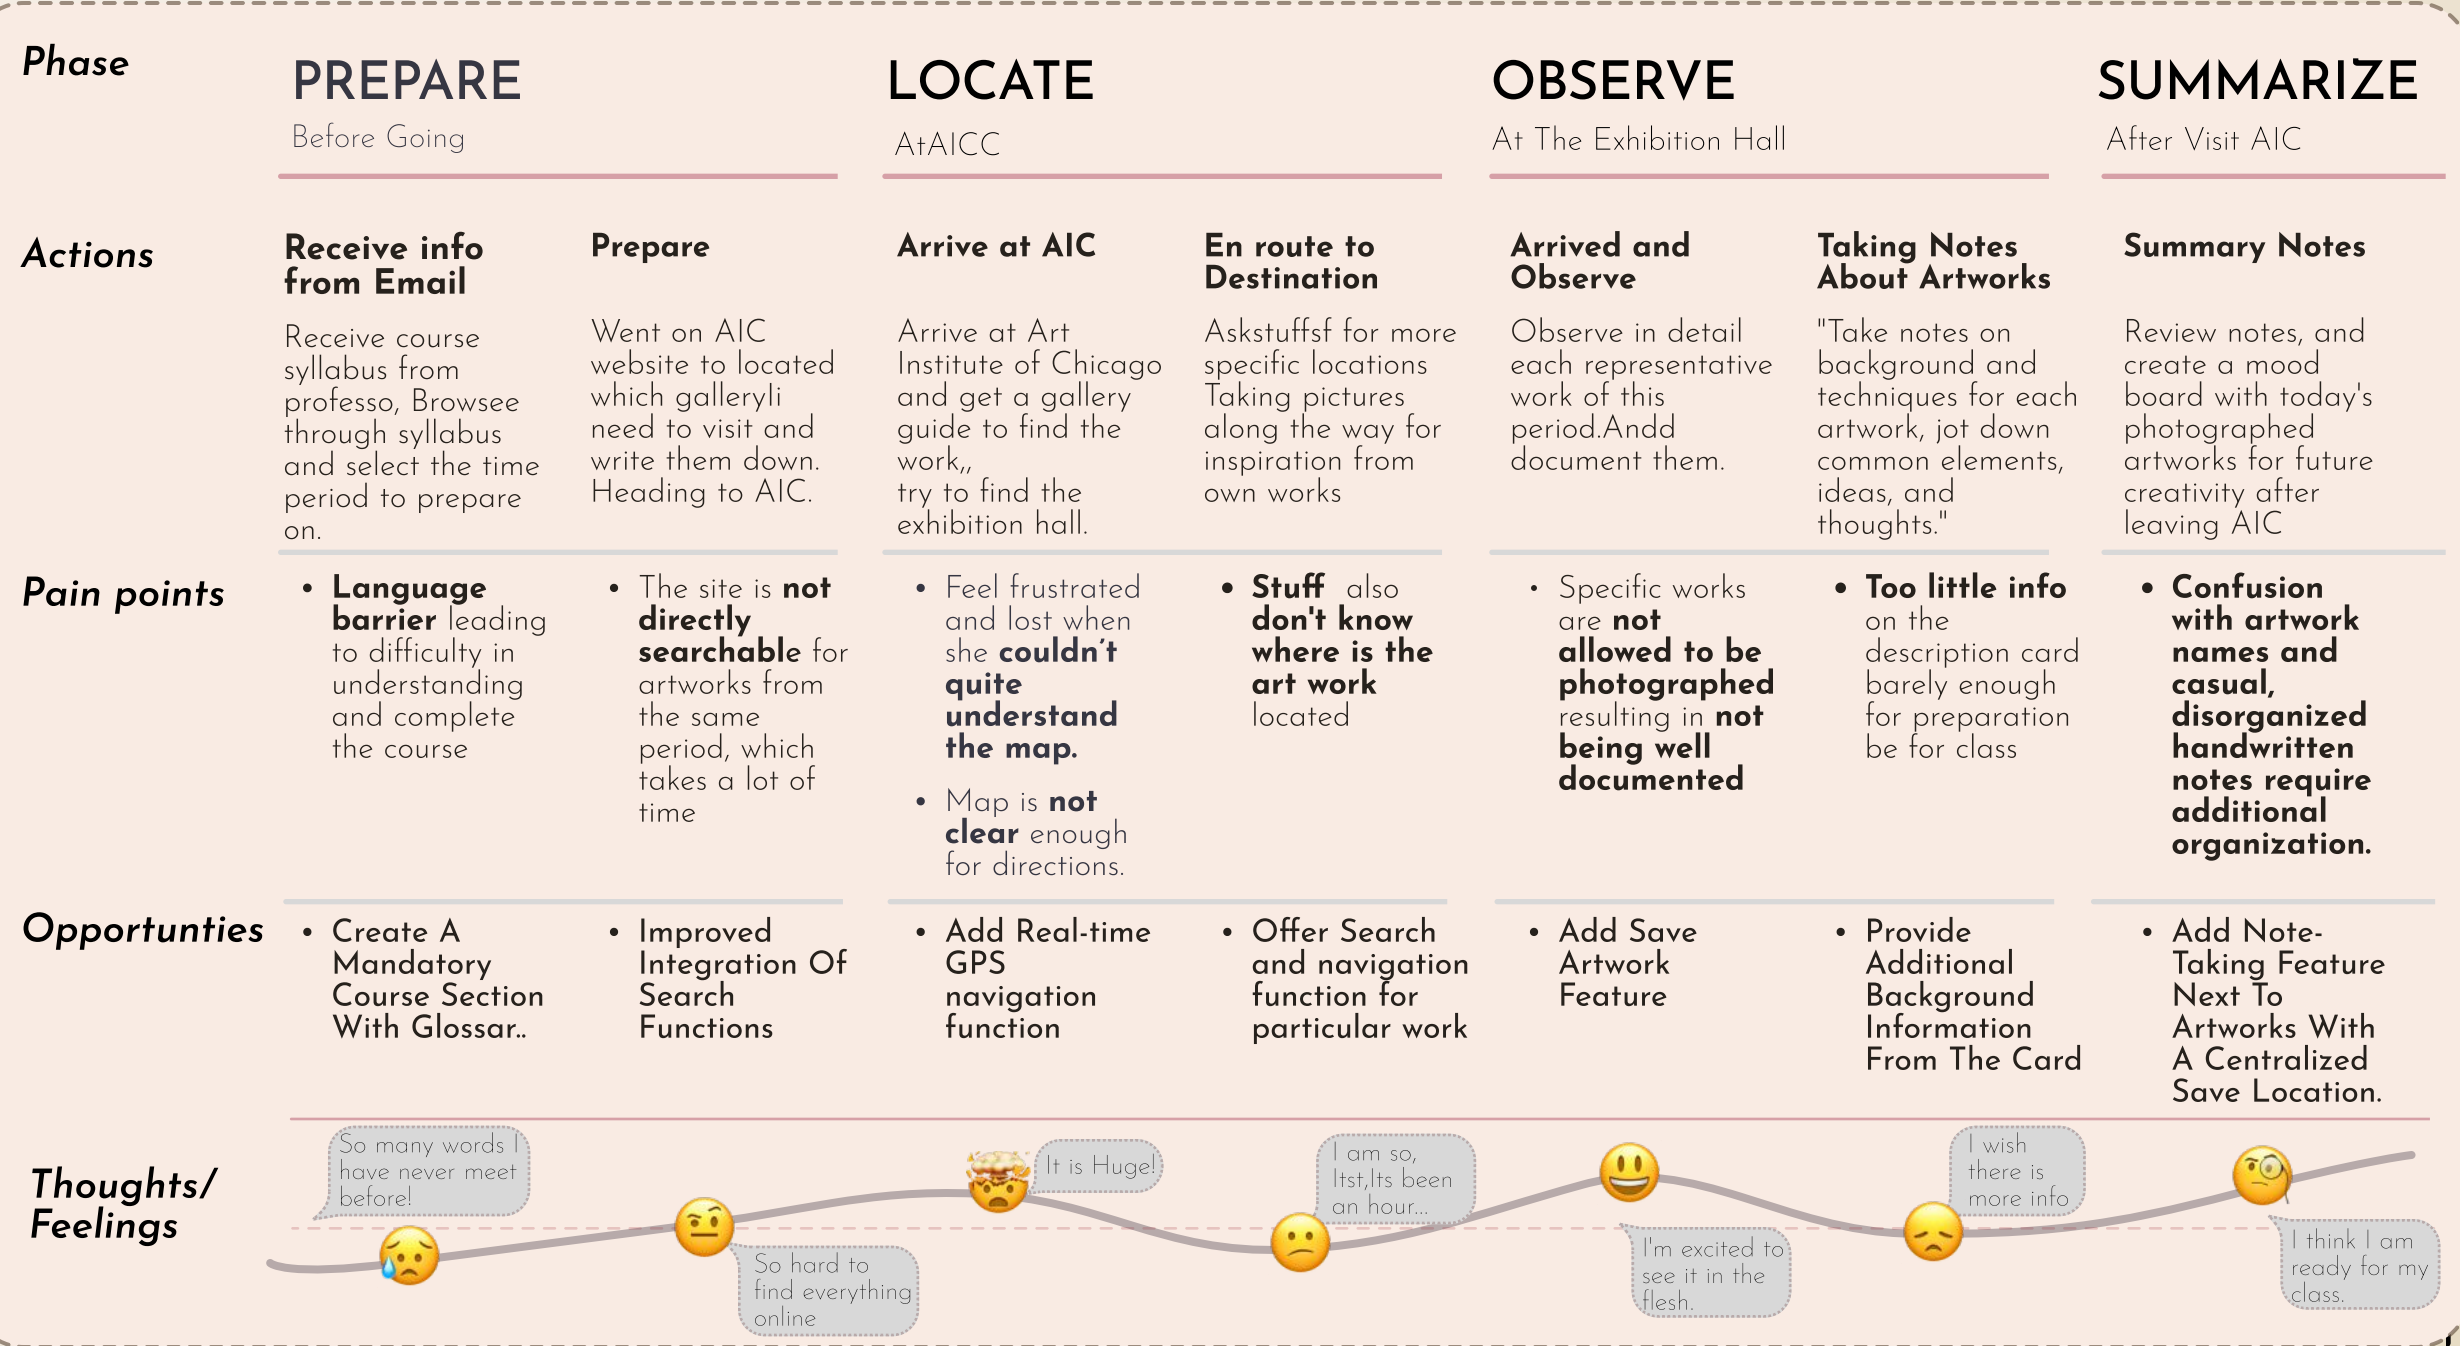

- Overwhelmed by the size of AIC and difficulty navigating exhibitions using the paper map.
- Feels discouraged and uncertain about successfully completing assignments.
- Struggles to identify research directions and find relevant resources.
- Finds it challenging to comprehend complex academic language in research papers due to limited English proficiency.

Goal

- Prepare for the upcoming art history courses
- aim to gain creative inspiration by understanding the background of different artworks to develop own style and vision
- Learn more about unfamiliar artists and art works in order to broaden horizons and expand knowledge of different styles, techniques and cultural contexts.

Kenyan's Problem Statement:

Kenyan is an oil painting student who wants to get inspired by getting to know as many artists as possible because she wants to develop her own paintings styles.

Kenyan is a freshman international student who needs to prepare for her first Art history course because she is struggled to comprehend the complex academic language used for this course.
